January 11th was the day I had to give my ARM presentation to the class. As such, on this day, I spent my time practicing my presentation and making sure that I would stay under the time limit of nine minutes.

(A picture of the stopwatch that I used to time myself while giving my presentation. It took me a little over 8 minutes and 40 seconds, so I had approximately 20 seconds to spare)

After practicing what I would say, I rehearsed my presentation with my slideshow. I had to make sure that all of my transitions and animations lined up with what I was saying. During this time, I also made adjustments to what I would be saying and streamlined some explanations to make it easier for the audience to understand. Additionally, this also cut down on the amount of time it would take to give my presentation.

As today was the day of my presentation, I did some last-minute practicing before I would have to present. At school, I went into one of the practice rooms connected to the band rooms and practiced until the time of my presentation.

The previous day, I made sure to focus on keeping my speech and slideshow in sync. On this day, I emphasized my volume and eye contact. Specifically, I tried to explode my voice while also keeping my eyes from staring up at the ceiling or down at the ground.

This would be the last time I did anything ARM-related because I spent the rest of my time studying for midterms.
